About Conference

The rapid growth of digital technologies, online banking, e-governance services, and social media platforms has significantly enhanced connectivity and convenience in modern society. However, this digital transformation has also increased the vulnerability of individuals and organizations to various cyber threats. Among the emerging cybercrimes, "Digital Arrest" scams have become a serious concern, where fraudsters impersonate law enforcement agencies, government officials, or judicial authorities to intimidate victims through fake notices, video calls, and threats of legal action. Such fraudulent activities often result in financial losses, psychological distress, and diminished public trust in institutions. This conference project examines the growing menace of Digital Arrest scams and other cybercrime threats, including phishing, identity theft, ransomware attacks, cyberbullying, online fraud, and data breaches. The study emphasizes the importance of cybersecurity awareness, digital literacy, and responsible online behavior in safeguarding individuals and communities. It also highlights the role of cyber laws, reporting mechanisms, educational institutions, law enforcement agencies, and community participation in building a secure digital ecosystem.
